The Group Project Problem

When Mrs. Carter announced a group project in class, the room filled with groans. Group projects always sounded easier than they were.

Lina was placed in a group with three classmates, Omar, Jason, and Maya. They had one week to prepare a poster and a short presentation about protecting the environment. Mrs. Carter reminded them that everyone must contribute equally.

On the first day, Lina brought ideas and notes she had prepared at home. Maya helped design the poster, and Omar promised to research recycling facts. Jason, however, leaned back in his chair and said Relax, we have got time.

By the middle of the week, Jason still had not done anything. When Lina asked him about his part, he shrugged. He said he would do it later and added that Mrs. Carter would not notice. Lina felt uncomfortable. She did not want to argue, but it did not seem fair. Still, she stayed quiet.

The night before the presentation, Jason sent a message to the group chat saying he forgot to do his work and asked if someone could explain his part the next day. Lina stared at her phone. She felt angry but also nervous. If she told the teacher, the group might get in trouble, and she did not want her classmates to be upset with her.

The next day, during the presentation, Lina spoke confidently about reducing waste. Maya explained their poster, and Omar shared his research. When it was Jason's turn, he froze. He looked at the floor and stayed silent. Mrs. Carter waited patiently, then asked Jason if he had prepared his section. The room felt heavy. Lina's heart pounded. She took a deep breath and raised her hand. She told Mrs. Carter that Jason did not have time to do his part. She explained that the rest of the group worked together and did not want to lie. Jason looked surprised. Mrs. Carter nodded and thanked Lina for being honest. She said honesty takes courage.

After class, Jason walked up to Lina and admitted that he was wrong. He apologized and said he should have done his work. Lina smiled and said that next time, everyone should do their part.

That afternoon, Lina realized something important. Doing the right thing is not always easy, but it helps everyone learn and grow.
